THE CENTENNIAL AND OUR COLLEGE

The Class of '51 has at least two distinctions. It contains the last large group of veterans to pass through our halls; and it graduates in the year of the centennial of the founding of the first Young Men's Christian Association in North America.

This event took place in Montreal in 1851, and within the Association established at that time has grown in turn the 'Y' Educational Department of 1873 and the Sir George Williams College of today. To the parent institution the College owes much of its progressive philosophy of education and its attitude toward the spiritual in life. In this year of the Centennial the College therefore salutes the Association and pays tribute to the permissive atmosphere within which it has developed.

In common with the members of all previous classes, this year's graduates are distinguished, also, by an attitude toward each other which is typical of the true Georgian. This attitude is not fully described by the word 'harmony' — indeed, it may not even involve harmony. Rather it is a subtle blend of a respect and affection for each other which has always characterized undergraduate relationships in a way which has become recognized as a Georgian trait.

My fondest hope, therefore, as our graduates leave the College would be that this attitude toward other people may be carried into all the walks of life to which the future may summon them. This would, indeed, be the most valuable product of their education.

VALEDICTORY ADDRESS

BY DAVID BUSBY,

CLASS VALEDICTORIAN, AT CONVOCATION—JUNE 1, 1951

Mr. Chairman,
Mr. Principal,
Honored Guests,
Members of the Board of Governors,
Members of the Faculty,
Ladies and Gentlemen:

It is a great honour for me to speak on behalf of the Graduating Class this evening. At this point in our lives we have the opportunity and obligation to express our thankfulness and good will, to those members of our families as well as to college officials, who have afforded us the means of university education. Many of us are particularly thankful for the College's Evening Division, without which it would have been impossible to obtain university education. We are truly grateful for the patient help and kindness given by the College Faculty; and for the many friendships that we have made with that Faculty. We will remember the personalities of these friends long after much of the detail of their courses has been forgotten; and it is this friendship that we cherish and are particularly thankful for at this time.

We have been fortunate in finding at Sir George Williams College a philosophy of education conducive to developing attitudes of tolerance, open-mindedness, and criticism. The Aims of the College give a sound basis on which to "Grow in character and personality as well as in those techniques and appreciations which may be required in full and satisfactory living." It is further recognized that good scholarship can only be sound when it is vital in a living process. It is therefore deduced that our kind of education is not a method of becoming highly specialized in one small area of life, but is rather a process of maturing attitudes towards persons, institutions, and the whole of one's environment.

The word "college" implies a body of colleagues. During the past few years we have been members of such a body, whose aim it was to discover and clarify truth. An important part of our life was the generally prevalent atmosphere of tolerance, open-mindedness, and criticism — qualities of personality so necessary to the search for truth.

The university, while being a "universe" or community in its own right, is also part of a wider society outside its walls; this wider society has responsibilities to the university, just as the university has responsibilities to the outside community. It is important to note, however, that the atmosphere of society in general hardly corresponds, at present, to the ideals of our College. For there we find social forces and pressures directed against the search for truth — against the atmosphere of tolerance and skepticism. The society's norm, it must be said, is not one of truth, but rather one of conformity; and this conformity invariably tends to make inroads upon individual liberty. At the same time, the comparative size and strength of outside society means that very often it exercises undue pressure and a molding influence upon the university.

The result of this social pressure is not usually desirable. For example, we find that very often unimportant issues gain the attention of students, and thereby distract them from questions which really affect the development of their personalities. Such questions usually present themselves to the individual as a choice between either conforming to the opinion of the majority, or being persecuted for the sake of the truth. One may even be persecuted, not for propagating some illegal ideology, but merely for attempting to uphold in practice the atmosphere of skeptical toleration, which in theory, is completely accepted in our College. Now, in some universities a great deal of time and effort are expended on "athletic nights," "pep rallies," and spectator sports, all at the expense of developing the mature personality and individual critical mind. It is even possible that, in our own College, the question of whether "coke" bottles should be placed on window sills tended, during the past session, to occupy much of our attention. Our minds might have been more profitably concerned with fundamental religious, social, and political issues. One of the results of such diversions, if they become the general rule, is the cultivation of a social unconsciousness expressing itself in apathy on the one hand and hysteria on the other.

The production of informed and critical leadership is the most obvious way in which the university may respond to society's pressure for conformity. A prophetic leadership is urgently needed. We, who have experienced to a large extent, the atmosphere in which truth can emerge, should now "prophesy" by taking this atmosphere of tolerance and skepticism into the circles of our particular professions. This prophetic leadership must be executed, however, on both individual and group levels. The group-conformism of society must be challenged not merely by the lonely skeptic, but by the corporate witness of those who have been educated into the critical attitude.

This evening we are happy and proud to be Graduates of Sir George Williams College. We are grateful to the Faculty and to the Board of Governors for having helped us enjoy our undergraduate work. We value the many friendships we have made among members of the Faculty and, at this time, we offer our sincere appreciation for all that has been done for us. We believe and expect that the coming years of our lives, in constructive service to the whole of society, will be proof of this appreciation.

WELCOME TO THE ALUMNI

by CHARLES NICHOLS

PRESIDENT OF THE ASSOCIATION OF ALUMNI

May I congratulate you, the class of '51, on the occasion of your graduation and I want to wish you all every success in your future undertakings.

The Association of Alumni welcomes you and we are happy to have you with us.

While you were working for your degree, you were naturally in close contact with the college, its facilities and its functions. Now that you are leaving Sir George and most of you will be entering business life in one form or another, your contact with Sir George Williams College will no longer be as close as it has been in the past.

The Association of Alumni is trying to keep you in touch with your Alma Mater. Through our Postgrad Magazine, we want to tell you of what is happening at Sir George and what your fellow-graduates are doing. Through meetings and social gatherings we are trying to keep you in touch with your classmates and bring you into contact with the graduates of earlier classes. Through our annual Giving Campaign we want you to help and contribute to Sir George Williams College so that you may pay back to the college in some small way a fraction of all that Sir George has tried to give you in another form during your stay there.

We are trying to build up a strong Association of Alumni of which we, the members, as well as Sir George Williams College can be proud.

In order to achieve this, the Association needs your help and we hope that you will not let us down. We will more than appreciate your active support and interest, as well as your suggestions and ideas.

Although you have now received your degree, we hope that you will never leave Sir George Williams College.

"Step right up, ladies and gentlemen! The science of psychology is about to verbally dissect a typical B.A. for your information and edification. Exciting revelations and momentous discoveries may be made, and important insights achieved."

On the analyst's couch reclines a B.A. — Male or Female — What's the difference? However, as Professor Rothney's anecdote goes: "Vive la difference!" Now to interview the subject who will unhesitatingly unburden his soul.

Psychologist — Relax, and tell me whatever thoughts come into your mind as Convocation approaches. (For the non-psychoanalytically oriented, this technique is known as free association. Injudiciously carried to extremes it may lead to dissociation.)

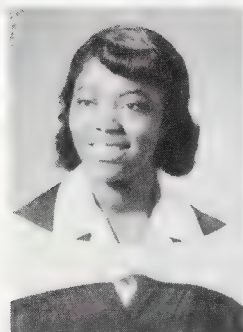

Bachelor of Arts — I see a pasture — a lamb gambols — a wolf lurks — what is the outcome? I acquire a sheepskin come June 1st. Like the graduate in the "lesser" faculties at S.G.W.C., the B.A. may range in age from 20-50 years. The totem animal of this strange clan, may be either an "early bird" or an "owl" depending on whether he attends day or evening college. On the average a minimum of 4 years, and approximately $1000.00 is invested for an academic banquet of 21 assorted (and sometimes ill-assorted) courses. Zounds! One would think I were a B. Comm. stressing these crass commercial aspects of education. To offset the "buck-hustling" impression, let me commend, praise, eulogize those all-round academic acrobats — the B.A.'s of '51. When you turn the page and as each pan you scan, look upon them long and well — for returning your stare, may be not only some "mute inglorious Milton," but a potential Toynbee, Kant, Sorokin, Boaz, or Bridges. Yes, indeed! The B.A. is a versatile creature — exposed as he has been to many professors and a variety of subjects. The graduate in Arts can, at a moment's notice (with unlimited funds and time for advanced studies) assume a multiplicity of roles. The historian, philosopher, sociologist, anthropologist, psychologist — all these impressive professionals were initially B.A.'s with an undergrad major in the field of their specialization. The fledgling legal eagle takes off for Chancellor Day Hall after trying his wings in the faculty of Arts. Likewise, ye old McGill prefers its embryo medicos to "pre-medicate" in Arts. The humanist, educational theorist, high school teacher, language specialist, journalist, and the political scientist invariably start their careers as B.A.'s with their atom bombs, nor the B. Comm.'s with their bank-rolls, will ever really surpass us.

So reserve a niche in the Hall of Fame for the grad of many parts
the Bachelor of Arts!

From 1948 to '50 he served as Clubs Chairman, and the following year worked on the Winter Carnival and served as secretary of the Student Gov't Reorganizing Committee. In his senior year he was elected President of the E.U.S. and also President of the Student's Council.

Some there are who would reach toward Science as panacea to cure the ills of the human species. Others, whose personal philosophy is in a state of flux, want a new deity to bow down to. Science, in its largest possible definition, embraces all of knowledge and men of science are often all too prone to disregard this fact. The research scientist cannot work in an atmosphere that is vacuous with regard to the great realms of thought and action embraced by politics, religion, philosophy, economics, sociology and the arts. On the contrary, he must fortify himself in these realms and in so doing both humanize himself and his work while bringing an enriching and fulfilling complement into the civilization he is a part of.

It will, then, fall to individuals such as those represented on the following pages, to fill the needs of a tense and frightened world and assist in her guidance toward the goal of enlightened and harmonious living for all men. Certain material benefits fall to the worker in science by right of toil but these are far outweighed by far longer lasting intangibles. In their quest for a satisfying place in scientific endeavour some will doubtless be highly successful while others will be less so. However, in the lifetime before them, none will be likely to forget the academic and personal associations — the veritable opening of the mind — achieved through the four or more years of association with the fine young university which all within this book are proud and happy to call Alma Mater.

Commerce '51

by SYDNEY CHECHIK

Conventionally in other colleges the reflections of any senior class begin in the fall of some given year and continue on unbroken for the following four years, terminating in graduation. This is not so with a good many of the students at Sir George.

The majority of the Commerce students are businessmen who have come to Sir George to further their education, which somehow they missed out on; some are veterans who have come to Sir George to resume their education that was denied them during the war years; others are students who have come to Sir George directly from high school.

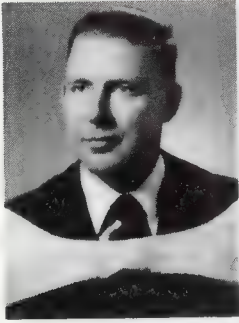

Many of the men are married, quite a few of them are fathers one or more times, and all of them are fired with the desire to get things over with in school so that they can take advantage of the better opportunities in business that are now available to them as college graduates. A small minority are also desirous of finishing their education before their children catch up to them.

Through the nostalgic reminiscences and frequently hilarious bull sessions of the various activities that these students have taken part in at the college, runs a more mature and sober thought. Political, sociological and economic developments are closely watched, analyzed and discussed. These students have learned, perhaps the hard way, that these things vitally affect them and that it is in their best interests that they keep a watchful eye on the tides of the times.

With strong hopes, the Commerce Class of '51, faces the future with interest, determination and ability.

"FRIENDLINESS AND CO-OPERATION"

by GERRY SINEL

Every year, when the graduation class executive begins to make plans for the graduation exercises, one of the first things they do is approach the Bursar to enlist his assistance. His co-operation is very important to the class executive because it makes their task of formulating plans for a successful graduation program much easier.

The Bursar's office annually undertakes the important and thankless task of billing every potential graduate for the graduation exercises and related activities. And for weeks prior to the ceremonies the Bursar and his staff are busy collecting fees and distributing photographs and tickets for the graduation ball.

Henry Worrell, who has been Bursar since 1947, has always been eager and willing to lend his complete support to student activities and help in every way possible to guarantee their complete success.

Born in Toronto, Mr. Worrell came to Montreal with his family when in his early youth. He completed his high school education at St. Willibrord's High School in Verdun and entered the day division of the college in 1936. In 1940 he received his Bachelor of Arts degree. During his four years of studies he was given part time jobs in the college offices and upon graduation he became a permanent member of the staff. In 1942 he was appointed Assistant-Bursar, a position he held until promoted in 1947 to the rank of Bursar.

His office has since become one of the most popular in the college and students constantly come to him for consultation and advice on personal and academic problems. His friendliness, co-operation and continual willingness to help others will always be remembered with gratitude by the graduates and the graduation class executive of 1951.

IS THIS COLLEGE EDUCATION?

by MAURICE MILLER

Today's student has discovered that if he sits in a lecture-room three times a week and if he sits long enough, he can graduate. To too many students a college education simply means a degree. To too many students a college education is anything but an education.

Too many of our students are uneducated. They do not know how to think for themselves. They do not know how to read intelligently. They do not know how to make decisions on important issues that may confront them. Our colleges have become institutions of mass education. The individual student has disappeared. He has learned mechanical skills; he has learned how to make a living but not how to live.

We do not deny their importance. But are these the prime reasons for colleges? We will admit, as Professor Thompson says in his "Humanism in Action", that "one of the functions of education is to fit us into the pattern of organized society by instructing us in the skills which have become essential attributes of living." But to go a step further we say that "the secret of successful education lies in stimulating in the student the desire to know." This is an important reason for college.

Today's student soaks up information which he hopes will enable him to obtain a pass mark in examinations. He has certain minimum syllabus requirements to meet. He is too busy to learn how to think; too occupied to acquire knowledge and understanding in his course subjects. On the other hand, the lecturer has a time table to follow. And follow it he does. Whether the student is able to intelligently absorb what has been said seems to be of little concern to some lecturers. We must sadly admit that some lecturers have much knowledge and experience in their fields but unfortunately are unable to impart their knowledge for the student's benefit. Neither lecturer nor student is able to do justice to their respective tasks of teaching and of learning.

Another important reason for college is to enable students to get what Huxley calls a Liberal Education — "one which will enable him to be intelligently aware of social and economic conditions; political systems and ideas; religious, moral, and philosophical concepts and aesthetic experiences." In other words, a student should be able to obtain an education on how to live; not only an education on how to make a living.

Today's student sits in a lecture room with several hundred other students. The professor may lecture over a public address system; he refers to lecture notes; recommends certain texts and concludes his lecture. There is no time available for questions or discussion period. This continues until examination time. The student studies his texts, does the required reading, glances over mimeographed lecture-notes which he has probably bought from a previous student, tries to pick the questions most likely to be asked and then he enters the examination room. His professor may not personally mark the answers but has student assistants to do the chore. Possibly the only sign of the human hand in the student's college career is when he registers, pays his fees, and receives his diploma at convocation. This may be college. It is not a college education. It definitely is not a liberal education.

Yet it would be wrong to deny talented youth the opportunity for higher education on the grounds that there is no room. The solution lies in a revamping of our system of college education.

This is the problem which confronts the thinking leaders of our progressive colleges. The challenge is whether the colleges will turn out automatons and quiz experts or thinking individuals ready to accept the responsibility of citizenship in this troubled world.
